

Angelina Villapiano, aka Miss Angelina, Bio

Miss Angelina is a comedian, writer and recording artist based out of San Juan, Puerto Rico. She received her degree in Theatre from Northwestern University, and has been creating content focused on music, comedy and culture ever since.

As an artist that writes, produces and performs her own material, she sees herself as the Latina version of Issa Rae, Michaela Coel, or Ilana Glazer.

She wrote and hosted “¡GLOBAILE!” - a music & travel web series co-starring DJ Tony Touch - that was featured on the network television program American Latino and streamed online with John Leguizamo’s NGL Media.

She has released 2 albums of original music on Apple & Spotify, and performed on VH1.

She wrote, produced and starred in Sorta Rican, a solo show featuring her original music, that has been touring nationwide at notable venues such as the Nuyorican Poets Cafe (NYC), the Los Angeles Women's Theatre Festival (LA), and Cinema Bar 1950 (San Juan, PR).

Her latest web series “Pandemic and Chill”, a raunchy comedy about the misery of dating during quarantine, was produced by her company, Nueva Productions, and is now streaming on YouTube.

Along with being a featured writer in the NHMC Latinx Stream Showcase, Angelina is also a recipient of the National Association of Latino Producers (NALIP) Emerging Content Creator Scholarship.